2. Citations and explanations

Document 1 [JP, 2000-237194, A (Hitachi, Ltd. et al.), 5 September, 2000 (05.09.00), full text, all drawings] describes a biological photometer having a photometer unit for detecting light passing through the body of a subject and generating a hemoglobin signal corresponding to the concentration of hemoglobin in the subject and a signal processor unit for preparing and indicating hemoglobin change information of the subject based on the hemoglobin signal, wherein the signal processor unit extracts characteristics of hemoglobin change patterns on the basis of the hemoglobin change information prepared.

Claims 1 and 4

The subject matters of claims 1 and 4 do not appear to be novel since they are equivalent to the invention described in the above document 1.

Claims 2, 3 and 5-8

The technique of judging whether a subject is healthy or ill by comparing the characteristics of hemoglobin change patterns is neither described nor suggested in any of the documents cited in the ISR.

VIII. Certain observations on the international application

The following observations on the clarity of the claims, description, and drawings or on the question whether the claims are fully supported by the description, are made:

Claims 2, 3 and 5-8 are not sufficiently supported by the specification. What "characteristics of hemoglobin change patterns" represent "being healthy" or "being ill," what diseases are meant and the grounds of making such judgments are not clear from the description of the specification.
